

Campus violence policy:
A ‘neglected child’ or a ‘bargaining chip’?

Barriers to effective institutional response

Oversexualization of the problem

Overreliance on “fast fixes”

Overemphasis on formal legal compliance.

“

We need a radical re-design of anti-harassment efforts in higher education. This is a tall order, but decades of research can guide this work and brave leaders can implement it (p. 22614).

2019: Sopha's story

University values

“responsible freedom in the search for truth and justice. We are honest, self-critical, and respectful. We cherish critical inquiry and investigative learning both for their own sake and for the development of an open, diverse, and just society that suits the region in which we learn and serve”.

A large white circle is centered on a black background. To its left, there are several overlapping circles of varying shades of gray, with the number '1' in white. To its right, there are several concentric white circles of varying sizes. The text 'Harassment policy and its history' is written in a black, serif font inside the white circle.

problem. I only wanted to help one person

“

I no longer want to..., because there is no political will, because people who abused the policy are still here. I don't think we have protected the people who needed our help.

Inequality enables harassment

Sexual harassment policy is a political process

Harassment policy politics accept it a s socially constructed domain of power.
